James has already written several books on the involvement of irishmen and women in conflicts both national and international and this new book is no exception. the book, entitled "vietnam - the irish experience", tells the story of many irish people caught up in this bloody conflict which exploded on to the world stage. On 8 march 1965 the us marines waded ashore near da nang in south vietnam. with that first group of us marines was nineteen-year-old, connemara-born pat nee. irishmen mike kelly, ed somers and dan danaher arrived weeks later as the americans and their "vietnam - the irish experience" by irish author james durney, gives accounts of the experiences of irish veterans who survived the war in vietnam. it also details the circumstances surrounding the actions involving some of those who made the supreme sacrifice. The irish experience of the irish in the vietnam war is not a story often told, and all are invited to the launch of the first book to assess the role of the irish who were drawn into the war.
